The Concept of Brief

The first step in the proposal process is to develop the concept brief in the preparation for a meeting with a faculty member. The concept brief should be sufficiently detailed to allow the faculty member to judge if the dissertation idea is of appropriate scope, the required information will be accessible, the student will have organizational support if needed, and a dissertation committee with the appropriate skills and background can be assembled.
A research problem should be posed, and one more research question should be formulated.

A sufficient literature search should have been done so that a brief background of the problem is presented and there is confidence that the necessary information to answer the research questions will be available. A research methodology should have been considered.
